CASTAWAYS JOIN 'Y' BOYS ON RANKS OF THE BENEDICKS BIG TRIP TO PEARL HARBOR

Captain Neils P. Benson, commander of the ill-fated schooner Eldorado, accompanied by Steve Drinkwater and Alec Simocau, members of his crew, has arrived at San Francisco from Tahiti. The skipper gave a graphic account of his and the crew's experience from the time the schooner was abandoned a hopeless derelict in the South Sea, 1,000 miles from Easter Island, to the time they landed on the fertile island and then how he and his two companions, after remaining on the island of refuge for 105 days, continued on to Paapeete, a distance of 2,500 miles, in the same open boat. This lifeboat was brought to the coast in the steamer Moana.

Loaded with 1,000,000 feet of lumber, the Eldorado sailed from Astoria for Antipagasta, April 1. On June 13, after being driven before a terrific gale for two days, the men were compelled to abandon the waterlogged craft. For eleven days the men faced apparent death and then landed upon the island called Easter. There were natives there and there was plenty to eat, as the range carried 20,000 sheep and 2,000 head of cattle.

The eleven men in the crew suffered many hardships and their hands, feet and faces were badly swollen when they were welcomed by the dusky natives. The men were tenderly cared for and in a few weeks some of the sailors became the husbands of dashing South Sea beauties. The married members of the crew refused to be tempted by any native lure and planned to get back to their homes as soon as possible.

Not wishing to wait until the only steamer of the year made the annual visit, Benson and two men set sail for Paapeete. It was a hazardous passage, but safely made, Benson has arranged that one of the British navy coilers is to make a call at Easter and bring the men away. The men who have wedded the native women will be permitted to remain on the island if they wish. Saunders and Kichmann, owners of the vessel, were awarded the insurance money some time ago. This is said to be the first time on record in which this was done in a case where the crew has afterwards appeared safe and sound.

Schooner Aloha is Doomed. A wireless message received at Tacoma says the abandoned schooner Aloha, from the Fiji Islands for Gray's Harbor, is pounding to pieces on the rocks off Destruction Islands. It looks, however, as if this may be an error, for when the tug Daring and Tatoosh towed the Aloha from their towlines she was 15 miles off shore and more likely to drift up the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Jacking Left Launches Behind. In steaming from Puget Sound to Honolulu by the way of San Francisco, Colonel Jacking, the Utah multi-millionaire mining man, who it is said, will spend some weeks in the islands while cruising in his private yacht, Cyprus, is said to have been obliged to leave two motor launches behind. The vessel returned to Victoria to leave the boats owing to the difficulty in keeping them in the checks. Before again clearing Port Townsend, a new crew was engaged.
